

Fragments and Run-On Sentences

Name: _____

Date: _____

Score: _____ / 10

Quick Review

A complete sentence has a subject and a verb and tells a full idea. A fragment is missing a part. A run-on jams two complete sentences together with no punctuation OR with only a comma (comma splice).

Explanations
1. A	There is a verb (ran) but NO subject — who ran? It is a fragment. It is not a run-on (only one clause), not complete (missing subject), and not compound (no two independent clauses joined).
2. B	Two complete sentences are jammed together with no punctuation = run-on. A fragment is missing a part; a compound sentence would have a comma + conjunction ('I love pizza, but my brother loves tacos').
3. C	Subject = 'bus', verb = 'stopped', full idea = complete sentence. Nothing is missing (not a fragment); only one clause (not a run-on or comma splice).
4. D	'Because' starts a DEPENDENT clause. A dependent clause cannot stand alone — it is a fragment. It is not complete (no main clause), not a run-on (only one clause), and not compound (no second independent clause).
5. C	Two independent clauses joined by comma + conjunction ('so') = correct compound sentence. A inserts a comma in the wrong place; B leaves a comma splice (comma alone cannot join two complete sentences); D puts the comma after 'so' instead of before it.
6. D	The original is missing a main verb. D adds 'is mine' — a verb plus complete idea. A only adds punctuation (still no verb). B inserts an unneeded comma (still no verb). C adds a verb but ALSO an extra comma between the subject and the verb (over-correction).
7. B	A semicolon joins two CLOSELY RELATED complete sentences. A is a comma splice (comma alone is not strong enough). C and D place the comma in the wrong spot and still leave a run-on.
8. False	It is a fragment — it has no main subject and verb telling what happened after the weekend.
9. A	A has a subject (kite) and a verb (soared) and tells a full idea. B has no subject; C is a dependent prepositional phrase, no main verb; D is just two prepositional phrases — no subject or verb.
10.	Answer: My dog barks all night. I cannot sleep. Accept any split that produces two complete sentences with a period and a capital letter (e.g. 'My dog barks all night. I cannot sleep.'). Mark wrong: a comma splice ('barks all night, I cannot sleep'); leaving the run-on as is; combining into one sentence with no fix.
