Explanations
1. B	Two independent clauses ('The puppy barked' / 'the kitten ignored him') joined by comma + FANBOYS 'but' = COMPOUND. A simple sentence would have only one clause. Complex would need a dependent clause (because/when/if...). Compound-complex needs both.
2. D	'Although it rained all morning' is a dependent clause (it starts with subordinating 'although'); 'the parade still started on time' is independent — together that's COMPLEX. A simple sentence has no dependent clause; compound needs two independent clauses; compound-complex needs two independents PLUS a dependent.
3. C	C has ONE subject ('runners') and a compound verb ('stretched and jogged') — still ONE independent clause = simple. A is compound (comma + 'and'). B is complex ('Before the race began' is dependent). D is compound (semicolon joins two independent clauses).
4. A	Compound = two independents joined by comma + FANBOYS. A uses ', and'. B and D produce COMPLEX sentences (subordinating 'when' / 'because'). C is a run-on (no punctuation between two independent clauses).
5. B	Two independents ('Sam pulled the cookies out' / 'they cooled on the rack') joined by comma + 'and' PLUS a dependent ('When the timer beeped') = COMPOUND-COMPLEX. Complex would have only one independent. Compound would have no dependent. Simple has only one clause.
6. D	D joins two independent clauses with comma + 'and' = COMPOUND. A and C are complex (dependent clauses 'After lunch' / 'If the team practices'). B is simple (one clause).
7. C	C uses subordinating 'because' to introduce a dependent clause + one independent clause = COMPLEX. A and D are compound (comma + FANBOYS). B is compound (semicolon joins two independents).
8. D	Compound rule: independent clause + COMMA + FANBOYS + independent clause. D follows the rule. A drops the second subject ('he'), so it's now a simple sentence with a compound verb (no comma needed). B is a run-on (no comma). C wrongly uses a semicolon AND 'and'.
9. B	Two independents joined by 'and' WITHOUT a comma = a run-on; a correctly punctuated compound needs a comma before 'and'. A is wrong because the comma is missing. C is wrong because there's no subordinator. D is wrong because there are two clauses, not one.
10.	Answer: Because the snow fell quickly, the roads became dangerous. (Or: When the snow fell quickly, the roads became dangerous.) Accept any complex sentence that uses ONE subordinating conjunction to attach a dependent clause to an independent clause. If the dependent clause comes first, a comma must follow it. Mark wrong if the student uses a FANBOYS word (and, but, so) — that creates a compound, not complex — or writes a run-on with no conjunction.
