

Intensive Pronouns

Quick Review

Intensive pronouns (myself, yourself, himself, herself, itself, ourselves, yourselves, themselves) add EMPHASIS to a noun or pronoun already in the sentence. Test: if you can REMOVE the -self word and the sentence still makes sense, it is intensive. A REFLEXIVE pronoun looks identical but is the OBJECT of the verb — the action returns to the subject ('She hurt herself'). Never use -self words as subjects ('Myself went' — wrong) or as plain objects ('Send it to myself' — wrong; use 'me').

Explanations

1. B	An intensive pronoun emphasizes a noun and can be REMOVED with no loss of meaning: 'The mayor handed out the awards' still works. A is reflexive (Marcus is both subject and object of 'hurt'). C wrongly uses 'myself' as a plain object — should be 'to me'. D wrongly uses 'myself' as a subject — should be 'Aisha and I'.
2. C	A reflexive pronoun is the OBJECT of the verb and CANNOT be removed without breaking the sentence. In B, 'I taught myself' — 'myself' is the object of 'taught' (I taught me). Remove it and the sentence breaks: 'I taught how to solve...'. A and C are intensive (removable: 'The president answered' / 'The cake was beautiful'). D misuses 'myself' as a subject.
3. A	A misuses 'myself' as the object of the preposition 'to' — the speaker is not also the subject, so the reflexive does not belong. Correct form: 'to Mrs. Chen or me'. B uses 'by himself' (reflexive, idiomatic). C uses 'themselves' as an intensive (removable). D uses 'herself' as a true reflexive (she blamed her).
4. D	The standard plural form is 'themselves'. A uses 'theirselves', a non-standard form often heard in speech. B uses 'themself' (singular form for one person, doesn't match plural 'twins'). C uses singular 'himself' for two people.
5. B	B is intensive: 'herself' emphasizes that THE AUTHOR (not a stand-in) signed the books, and the sentence works without it — 'The author signed every book'. A, C, and D are all reflexives: removing the -self word breaks the meaning (Diego cut what? We promised what? Carmen reminded who?).
6. C	'Myself' cannot be a plain object — the subject (Coach Patel) is a different person, so no reflexive is needed. The object of 'asked' takes objective case: 'me'. A uses subjective 'I' as an object. B uses plural 'ourselves' for one speaker. D uses 'herself' for the speaker, which doesn't match person.
7. A	The standard form is one word, 'himself'. A is correct. B splits it into 'his self' (non-standard). C uses 'hissself' (non-standard form heard in informal speech). D writes 'him self' as two words (also non-standard).
8. D	Intensive pronouns come right AFTER the noun or pronoun they emphasize: 'You yourself' emphasizes 'you', and removing 'yourself' still leaves a complete sentence. A uses 'yourself' as a subject (wrong). B uses 'yourself' as a reflexive object (grammatical but not intensive). C jams the intensive in an awkward spot and breaks the sentence.
9. B	'Itself' is one word and is the standard intensive form for a singular non-human subject — it emphasizes that the cat (not someone else) opened the door. A confuses 'it's' (= it is) with the possessive. C splits 'its self' into two words (non-standard). D uses plural 'themselves' for one cat.

Answer: Please send the registration form to my coach or me by tomorrow morning. 'Myself' is wrong as a plain object — the speaker is not also the subject of 'send', so no reflexive belongs here. Replace 'myself' with the objective pronoun 'me'. Accept any revision that uses 'me' as the object of 'to'. Mark wrong if the student keeps 'myself', changes it to subjective 'I' ('to my coach or I'), or rewrites the sentence in a way that loses the original meaning.
